SECTION - A (Reading)

(Marks : 15)

- 1 Read the passage given below and answer the questions that follow : 8

In the last decade or so, much has been done for the protection of wildlife. All over the world we have become aware of the fact that many species of animals are becoming scarce. National parks and sanctuaries have been set up. Certain species have been introduced in the areas where they had become extinct. In India we find that the population of the tigers is increasing in various tiger reserves. In Canada beavers have been reintroduced in certain regions.

One important aspect of animal preservation is that majority of useful work has been done mainly for animals which are of some economic benefit to man. Most of the other animals are protected only on paper. They are allowed to die out because nobody can make any financial gain out of them.

It is only some zoologists who consider that every animal, every species is important to maintain ecological balance in nature. After all, this balance has been created by nature through millions of years. Man in his greed does not understand this fact : he too is part of this scheme of nature. And if he lets just one species to vanish it will put his own life at risk on the earth ultimately.

Human population is increasing year by year. Man wants to make his life more and more comfortable. Forests are being cut to get more land for agriculture so that enough food can be made available to the growing population.

It is important for man to realize the truth: man inspite of his genius cannot create a new species nor can he recreate one he has destroyed. It is time to be warned. On the basis of your understanding of the passage, answer the questions given below. Choose the options wherever given.

- (i) To protect the vanishing species of animals man has made : 1

2 Read the passage given below and answer the questions that follow : 7

Ram was on vacation. He enjoyed being among people and watching them. Suddenly he saw a woman who was different from the crowd. What was she doing there ? His curiosity to know more about the woman standing among the people at Dhakuria railway station increased. There was something unusual about her. No doubt like most Indian women she was wearing silver ear studs and was slightly brownish in complexion. Yet the way she stood erect balancing on her heels like a boxer with feet firmly planted apart made her look different. She was surely a foreigner. At the only platform of the railway station she was standing among dark brown crowd, a neat and tidy personality, very different from others.

Why would a foreigner and then a young woman be standing in a south Kolkata railway station waiting for the train to Canning ? It is true of course, that this line was the only rail connection to the Sunderbans, but as far as I knew it was never used by the tourists. Those going to the Sunderbans usually went by boats, steamers or launches. The train was mainly used by people who were daily passengers coming in from outlying villages to work in the city. He saw her turning to ask something of a person standing next to her. She probably wanted to know when the train was likely to come. She made certain signs with her hands. The person might not have understood her. In reply he said something in the local language, Bangla. Ram wanted to help. Pushing his way through the crowd he arrived within earshot. The only words he could hear were : “Ami Bangla Jani Na”.
